St. Louis' favorite architect, Eero Saarinen, is honored in the above documentary from the award-winning Producer/Director Peter Rosen and co-Producer and Director of Photography, Eric Saarinen, ASC, whose mission was to commemorate his father's visionary genius. Eero Saarinen (1910-1961), was a Finnish-born American who designed such marvels as the Gateway Arch, the General Motors Technical Center in Michigan, the TWA Flight Center at JFK International Airport, Yale University's Ingalls Rink, Virginia's Dulles Airport and famous, modernistic furniture including the Tulip Chair, and more. Eero died suddenly at age 51 of a brain tumor and was unable to see the completion of his most famous work...the St. Louis Gateway Arch.

Eric Saarinen recorded his travels on a historic journey visiting the sites of those structures which exemplify the creativity and timelessness of his father's works. Using the latest 6K filming technology available, including drones, he has captured and recorded the essence of his father's mastery. "American Masters" presents the film's national broadcast premiere December 27, on PBS and in St. Louis at 7 p.m. on Nine PBS.
